Brother Shoots Brother In Gun Fight Xmas Eve

Charles Polchow, 32 years of Chicago Ridge was shot and instantly killed by his sixteen year old brother Herbert, Christmas eve at the home of the brothers father.

According to the story told, the dead man had been drinking heavily and while drink crazed came to his father's home while the family was decorating a Christmas tree and in a rage pulled a shot gun on his father. A tussle then followed and the gun was discharged, the shot entering the ceiling. The would be assassin ran out a rear door and as he did so the younger brother waited for him with a rifle. He took one shot at his brother, the shot striking him in the head between the eyes. He was still breathing when picked up, but died shortly after being carried into the house.

A list of nine names was found on the dead man's body all of whom he had planned to kill. Among those marked for execution was Mayor Ruzies of Chicago Ridge, who is a brother of Jake Ruzies of Orland Park.

The dead man was formerly police chief of Chicago Ridge.

Mrs. Herman Scheer, Mokena Dies After Years of Illness

Mrs. Gussie K. Scheer, 48 years old, died at her home in Mokena on Wednesday morning. She was an invalid for eight years. She was the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Mose Maute of Frankfort.

She is survived by her husband, Herman Scheer, a brother, Ralph Maute, and five sisters, Miss Flora Maute, Mrs. Amelia Hansen, Mrs. Anna Poehner, Mrs. Elizabeth Moore and Mrs. Fred Bushpiz.

Funeral services Friday afternoon at two o'clock from the home. Burial in Pleasant Hill cemetery at Frankfort.

Bremen School Districts Organize

The school districts of Bremen township have formed an organization known as "The Bremen Township School Districts Organization of Cook County".

Mr. Picatte of Midlothian has been chosen president, Bart Fulton of Tinley Park Vice-President, Leonard Fulton, secretary and treasurer.

The main object of the organization is to seek a uniform salary for school teachers in all the districts of the township. In addition the organization is also opposing the consolidation of all schools in Cook County as proposed under the metropolitan bill which all the districts outside of the city of Chicago are opposing on the ground that it would destroy the individualism of the schools.

All school problems in Bremen township will be handled by this organization.

Herman Studtmann, New Lenox Dies

Herman Studtmann, Jr., died at the Studtmann home in New Lenox township, December 28th, aged 55 years, 3 months and 24 days. He leaves to mourn two brothers, Ben of Joliet, and August; two sisters, Lizzie and Frieda of New Lenox; one aunt, Mrs. August Mueller of Aurora.

Mr. Studtmann lived at the home place in New Lenox all his life, and where he passed away. Services were held Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the Wunderlich and Harris Funeral Home in Joliet with Rev. E. W. Frenk officiating. Burial was in St. Peter's Lutheran cemetery, Joliet.

Rock Island Makes Accident Settlement

Authorization to accept $15,000 in full settlement for all claims against the Rock Island railroad was granted Mrs. Catherine Horras, widow of John Horras of Mokena and administratrix of his estate in probate court.

Mr. Horras died August 16 at La Salle from injuries he suffered when the locomotive of the Rocky Mountain limited on which he was fireman left the tracks in that city. His wife and four children survive as heirs to the estate.

The court named as appraisers of the estate Genevieve L. Drake, Joseph Gibbons and Robert E. Duffy.

Veterans of Foreign Wars Officers To Be Installed at Mokena

The Veterans of Foreign Wars Wm. Martin Post No. 725 of the Lincoln Estates will hold its installation of officers on the evening of January 7th, 1933 at St. Mary's Hall in Mokena at 8 o'clock.

Every eligible ex-service man and his wife is most cordially invited to attend.

The state commander will be in charge of the installation work.

War Declared on Gambling in Will Co.

States Attorney Wm. R. McCabe of Will County is conducting a relentless war against the operation of slot machines and hand books in Will county and has started a real clean up in Joliet.

Most of the saloon operators who had been housing the slot machines took McCabe at his word and removed the devices. A few, assured by the backers that it would be "all right," decided to hold the fort.

"I was elected to be the state's attorney of Will county," McCabe declares. "I will be state's attorney. Handbooks and slot machines are against the law. They will have to go."

Road Building In Will County Halted

Road building in Will County will be greatly curtailed in 1933 as the county's share of the state gas tax money is going for county relief work. The county road officials feel it will take quite a few years before there will be as much road building done in the county as there was done during the past several years.

The county board of supervisors recently defeated a resolution which provided for the costs of right of ways on which bids were opened last Saturday. The situation is unusual insofar as the state is ready to proceed with construction and the county is unwilling to permit the expenditure of some $300,000 within the county.

Celebrate Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. John Schultz of Greenwood Avenue, Blue Island celebrated their golden wedding anniversary Saturday evening, December 17 at the home of their daughter, Mrs. Hauptman. The house was decorated in gold streamers. A delightful dinner was served to 150 guests. Following the dinner a program of songs was given by the grand children and an appropriate address was given by the Rev. Mr. Reinke of the Salem Lutheran church of Blue Island. About midnight there was dancing and singing, the music being furnished by Herbert Schultze.

At a late hour lunch was served. The guests departed wishing their hosts many more years of wedded life. They received many beautiful presents.

Mr. and Mrs. Schultz once lived on 147th street near Midlothian. They located in Blue Island about twenty years ago.

Business Men Fleeced By Check Kiter

A smooth piece of check kiting resulted in the fleecing of business men in Tinley Park and some of the filling stations near Orland.

A man wearing a hunting outfit appeared at these various business places recently and made heavy purchases and always paying cash for same. Shortly before Christmas he appeared at a number of places and asked to have a bank cashier's check cashed. As he had been a good ready "cash" customer his check was readily cashed, but when the checks arrived at the clearing house they were found to be no good. Fictitious bank name had been used. The matter was reported to the Chicago Detective Bureau and a detective came out to check up. He said the same game had been worked on business men in Blue Island and Chicago Heights. Beware of strangers checks.

Tinley R. N. A. Has Past Oracle Night

The Tinley Park Camp of the Royal Neighbors of America celebrated "Past Oracles Night" at their meeting Tuesday night. There was a large attendance. There were 15 members present from the Harvey camp. They were all attired in costume which made quite a furore. Some came as minstrels, others in times of "Way Back When".

The past oracles are Mrs. Andres (Mother of the camp) who was the first oracle. She now resides in Aurora. Then followed Mrs. E. Harding, Mrs. L. Rogers, Mrs. Wm. Funk, Mrs. M. Gotham, Mrs. C. Mayfield, Mrs. P. Hanrahan, Mrs. L. Moss, and Mrs. A. Clemens.

Mrs. P. Pearman, the deputy of the district was the honored guest. After Oracle Anna Mesenbrink called the meeting to order, all were introduced to the visitors, officers and members.

The past oracles were presented with a gift and two new members were initiated which makes 25 new members for this year and a total of 102 for the camp. The entertainment committee deserves a lot of thanks for the wonderful program rendered and also the refreshment committee for the refreshments served later. The present oracle as well as the past oracles extend a hearty "Thank you" for an evening never to be forgotten.

Mokena Garden Club to Meet

The Mokena Garden Club will meet at the home of Mrs. Rose Beckstein on Third St. Tuesday, January 3rd, 1932.

Tinley Youth Knocked Out By Stone

Glenn Moss of Tinley Park and several of his friends were throwing stones into a tree the other day and the little fun had dire results. When the stone supply was exhausted, Glenn crawled under the tree to pick them up and in raising his head one of the boys threw another stone which hit Glenn right square in the mouth, cutting his lip and knocking him unconscious. He was taken home and later his mother took him to the doctor where he was given medical aid, but it was several hours later before he was rational. He is up and around but his head and mouth are causing him pain and distress.

Orland Firemen Sponsor Community Christmas Tree

The Orland Park Volunteer Fire Department members demonstrated what a live organization can do for a community the past week. The Orland firemen decided to sponsor a community Christmas tree. They bought a magnificent tall Christmas tree and erected it in the square in front of the Loeb store close up to the Wabash depot. The tree was beautifully illuminated with colored electric lights. The firemen secured the co-operation of the Orland Park Community Band, the Or-Los Choral Society and the school children and a very fitting program was carried out last Thursday evening in the presence of several hundred people.

The climax came at the end of the program when Santa Claus arrived on the scene riding on the fire truck and bringing a supply of candy gifts for the youngsters. The following program was presented:

1. Selection by band
2. Address Mrs. H. Adele Cooper, President of School Board.
3. Rev. John Mullen, pastor M. E. church offers prayer.
4. Song by Choral Society.
5. Selection by band.
6. Recitation by Buddy Cox
7. Santa Comes We Know by the primary room, Orland Park school.
8. How I Played Santa by Dorothy Jarrell.
9. Song by Choral Society
10. Candy Store. . . . Carl Jarrell
11. Upon the Housetops by Primary and intermediate rooms Orland Park School.
12. I like to see Old Santa, Franklin Uthe.
13. Choral Society.
14. Santa's Coming, Primary room.

The Orland Park Volunteer Fire Department deserves much praise and credit for sponsoring the community Christmas tree and also all those who co-operated with the firemen.

Relief Problem in Country Districts

The relief problem is steadily increasing thruout the country communities. In New Lenox township about 56 families are being taken care of by the relief organization. In Frankfort there is about an equal number being taken care of.

Unemployment has caused a serious local problem same as every other community has to face.

STATE CAPITOL NEWS

Hiram L. Williamson,
Illinois Press Association, Editor

Gov. Louis L. Emmerson has signed Representative Homer J. Tice's county optional sales tax bill giving county boards, by a two-thirds vote, authority to extend a sales tax of 1 per cent. The bill carried an emergency clause and becomes effective at once. The governor returned the Michel horse racing bill to the legislature with his veto, pointing out that as an emergency relief measure it would accomplish nothing as there will be no horse racing in the state for months after the convening of the next regular session.

Hon. Adam F. Bloch of Chicago took the oath of office and assumed the duties of clerk of the Supreme court, Tuesday, December 6. Mr. Bloch succeeds Hon. Charles W. Vail, also of Chicago.

Following a prolonged session, the state tax levy board recessed without fixing the state tax rate for 1933. The recess was taken to permit further consideration of figures and a study of the problem with representatives of Governor-Elect Horner.

Hon. Roy A. Johnston of Taylorville, the newly-elected clerk of the Appellate court for the Third district, assumed his duties, Tuesday, December 6. He stated there would be no change in the office personnel for the present. Miss Marguerite Belt holds the position of deputy clerk and Mrs. Gladys Halbert as stenographer. Mrs. Laura B. Walmsley, who has held the office since the death of her brother, George L. Tipton, expects to spend the winter in Texas.

Building and loan associations in Illinois would be authorized to increase their aggregate borrowing power from $70,000,000 to $110,000,000 under the Brauns bill, which has been passed by the senate by a vote of 35 to 0. The senate also passed joint resolution No. 2 which requests that building and loan associations, banks and insurance companies declare a moratorium on mortgages for one year to save homes to present property owners.

B. G. Arkebauer was re-appointed Supreme court librarian by the Illinois Supreme court, Tuesday, December 6, for a term of six years. He has served the state for the past twenty years. Mr. Arkebauer came from Mount Olive in 1904, studied law, and was admitted to the bar. He succeeded Ralph H. Wilkins as Supreme court librarian.

Cutting down estimated expenses, the World's fair commission under Gov. Louis L. Emmerson's leadership has allocated items for various expenses to keep within the $350,000 appropriated for the state's participation in next year's exposition. Pleas for more money were met by the governor's statement that the commission must stay within the appropriation.

Hon. Waller M. Buskham assumed his duties December 7 as clerk of the Appellate court for the Fourth district, with headquarters in Mt. Vernon. His assistant is Oscar Hooker of East St. Louis; his stenographer and court reporter, Mrs. Rheba Hungate of Mt. Vernon; and the two janitors, Joe E. Smith (an ex-service man) and Grant Holcomb.

Formal opening and dedication of the new Mississippi river bridge at Savanna scheduled for December 9 was postponed indefinitely because rains made approach from the Iowa side impassable.

The Illinois Commerce commission has announced an order directing all railroads to cut approximately in half the present rate for the shipment of Christmas trees in less than carload lots. The new rate applies to all points in the state.

Twenty-five down-state counties which formerly received aid from the Illinois emergency relief commission, but which are now meeting their relief needs through the use of motor fuel tax funds have requested the commission to make its local machinery available to them for the administration of those funds for relief purposes, according to a report submitted to the commission by its chief auditor, Russell L. Peters.

Hon. Howard P. Castle of Barrington, died at his home December 5, leaving a wife and six children. Mr. Castle served five terms in the house of representatives for the State of Illinois, and was one of the most progressive members. He was fifty-four years of age.

Two Types of Topaz

There is a true or precious topaz and also quartz topaz. True topaz is a complex silicate of aluminum with a high fluorine content, while quartz topaz is silicon dioxide with an admixture of metals which give it color. True topaz may be light yellow, light blue, green, orange, pink or wine-colored.

The Right Course

The master in the ship is judged by the directing his course aright, and not by the fortune of the voyage.—Bacon.

Unemployment insurance and the five-day week will be opposed by the Illinois Manufacturers' association at the next session of the Illinois general assembly beginning January 4, as unsound in principle and costly and impractical in operation. A strong declaration to that effect was made by the association in a bulletin to its membership by James L. Donnelly, executive vice president.

In the interests of uniformity and greater safety and to avoid losses experienced in the past, the building and loan department of State Auditor Oscar Nelson's office hereafter will require the examiners to inspect all abstract and certificates of title on all new loans and report if they have been brought down to date to include the association's loan.

Dental service valued at $332,520 was given to patients and inmates of the state institutions during the past fiscal year, according to the Welfare Bulletin, at a total cost of $57,588. This does not include thousands of minor examinations. In compiling the value of the service, Dr. C. L. Daniels, state dental supervisor, used the prevailing cost of various sorts of service in high-grade dental offices.

The state of Illinois called for bids December 15 on $20,000,000 of relief bonds to bear an interest coupon not exceeding 6 per cent. This issue of bonds was the one that was approved by voters at the last November election and proceeds of the financing will be used to retire State of Illinois revenue notes. The revenue notes were issued in February this year and the proceeds of that issue have already been entirely expended for relief purposes.

"Rabbit fever" has flared up again, the state department of public health has announced. In issuing a warning against this infection, public health authorities state that there is no danger of contracting this disease by eating game, even if the animal was infected. The danger lies in that germs from a diseased rabbit may enter the bloodstream of an individual engaged in dressing rabbits, through a slight cut on the hands.

While no definite date has been set, it is probable that the 1933 automobile plates will be out the middle of this month. The new plates are white letters on a field of dark blue. The first plates will go out to persons who requested the reissuance of numbers they now hold.

In a recent ruling issued by Attorney General Oscar E. Carlstrom, it is stated that the first installment of the 1932 taxes to be collected in 1933 will be delinquent February 1, 1933, if not paid, but will not draw interest until May 1; and the second installment, if not paid by August 1, 1933, will be delinquent and will draw interest at 1 per cent per month from August 1, 1933.

The Geneva office of the state banking department has been discontinued, it has been announced by State Auditor Oscar Nelson's office. State banks in 23 northwest counties which formerly did business through the Geneva office will do business in the Springfield office.

Robert E. Daily, one of the oldest official insurance supervisors in the United States, who served the state of Illinois in that capacity the last two years, died on December 5 after several months' illness from heart disease. For years past, he has served on important committees at each national convention of insurance commissioners.

Farmers who refuse to submit their cattle to a test for tuberculosis are guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine not to exceed $1,000 and his cattle can be placed in quarantine. This is the holding of Attorney General Oscar E. Carlstrom in an opinion to State's Attorney Ralph W. Cowden, Monmouth.

A definite report of the Hunter future road commission will be worked out soon by a subcommittee and presented to the entire committee for final consideration during the holiday season. The work of the commission, it is stated, has been handicapped by the passage of the recent law giving counties authority to divert their share of the gasoline tax for relief purposes.

Another liquor raid at Stateville penitentiary netted the prison authorities several bottles of moonshine whisky. The whisky was found in a shed at the south gate of the prison. The structure adjoins a small building used as a dining hall for inmates who work outside the walls. Warden Frank D. Whipp announced that F. R. Cox, the guard in charge of the shed, had been dismissed. A week before guards found a copper still in a convict's cell.

Cattle Breeding

About the middle of the Eighteenth century British cattle breeders such as Robert Bakewell, Bates, Colling Brothers, Cruikshank and Duthie became greatly interested in improving herds and flocks. They worked on the principle that "like begets like."—Prairie Farmer.

STORY FOR THE CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

STICKYTOES TELLS JOHNNY CHUCK A SECRET

WHILE Johnny Chuck was stuffing himself in order to make more fat before seeking his bed to sleep the long winter away he did a lot of thinking. You know one can think and eat at the same time very nicely. What was Johnny Chuck thinking about? He was thinking about the coming winter and the curious ways in which his friends and neighbors would spend it. When other people do things in a different way from the way we do them we are very apt to think that their ways are curious, quite forgetting that to them our way may seem just as curious.

To Johnny Chuck there is only one sensible way of spending the long months when rough Brother North Wind and Jack Frost roar and howl and pinch and squeeze, and that is to curl up comfortably way down where rough Brother North Wind and Jack

"I Think," said He, "That I Have Got Quite as Much Sense as They Have."

Frost cannot reach him and there sleep until they have gone back to the far Northland. Johnny Chuck always thought of it as the only sensible thing to do. He sometimes quite forgot that it was the only thing he could do and so took credit for sense and wisdom which really didn't belong to him. You see, Johnny has no choice in the matter. He has to sleep that way because in the winter there is nothing he can eat.

But this is not so with many of his neighbors. Some of them eat things which can be kept for a long time without spoiling, like nuts and seeds, and those who eat these things pack them away into storehouses or hide them where they can find them. Then in the winter they sleep in bad weather and come out to play a little and to get food from their hiding places in pleasant weather. Happy Jack Squirrel and Chatter the Red Squirrel do this. Striped Chipmunk pops up for a breath of fresh air on warm, sunny days in winter. Jimmy Skunk is another who sleeps only part of the time. He does not store up food in storehouses, but like Johnny Chuck himself stores it up in the form of fat. But he does not depend on this wholly as does Johnny. He likes to come out and prow around a little when the snow is not too soft and deep.

Then there are others like Reddy and Granny Fox, Old Man Coyote, Billy Mink, Shadow the Weasel and Little Joe Otter, not to mention Peter Rabbit, who always manage to find enough to eat through the winter and so do no more sleeping than that they do in the summer. That is why they are provided with thick, warm coats. The same thing is true of the feathered folks, except that none of them sleep all winter. Those who cannot find food fly away to the sunny Southland where they can find it.

Johnny Chuck was thinking of these things as he ate and ate and it seemed to him that his way was far the best way. It saved a great deal of work and worry. He never was cold. He never was hungry. It made no difference to him what the weather might be. He wondered that everybody didn't do the same thing. He knew that wise Old Grandfather Frog does and Old Mr. Toad does. Thinking of Old Mr. Toad reminded him of Stickytoes the Tree Toad, who had spent the summer in the apple trees of the Old Orchard. He and Johnny had become great friends, being such near neighbors. At the thought of him Johnny stopped eating.

"I wonder," said he right out loud, "where he spends the winter?"

"Where who spends the winter?" asked a small piping voice. It was the voice of Stickytoes himself and there he was almost under Johnny's nose.

"Why, you!" exclaimed Johnny Chuck. "I was just thinking of you and wondering if you have as much sense as your cousins, Old Mr. Toad and Grandfather Frog. They do as I do, sleep all winter, and I was wondering if you do the same thing."

Stickytoes chuckled. "I think," said he, "that I have got quite as much sense as they have. In fact I think I've got a little more. Can you keep a secret, Johnny Chuck?"

"Certainly I can," replied Johnny Chuck. "Just try me and see."

Stickytoes hopped a little nearer to Johnny Chuck and whispered.

Johnny Chuck's eyes grew round with surprise. "Do you really mean that?" he asked as if he could hardly believe what Stickytoes had told him.

"Every word of it," replied Stickytoes, "but remember it is a secret. Now

PRESIDENT

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WHEN I was just a youngster, then They used to say, the older men, That any boy, they used to say, Might yet be President some day. His father might be rich or poor, But one thing, though, was certain sure, They used to say, and what they meant Was that he might be President.

And that today is just as true; This later generation, too, That famous title, too, may wear, Sit in the Presidential chair: The very youngster that you meet Right now upon the village street, Just as my elders used to say, May yet be President some day.

Some day the youngster's task may be

To bring us back prosperity, To keep at peace with other lands, And have a congress on his hands. Yes, any boy, no matter what His present fortune, present lot, Although the future may be dim, May yet—but why discourage him? © 1932, Douglas Malloch.—WNU Service.

BANANA DISHES

NOVEL recipes are always welcomed by the housewife who is constantly looking for appetizing dishes to please the tastes of her family.

Banana Marmalade.

"Peel and slice bananas, using two pounds of bananas and the same amount of sugar and the juice of a lemon. Put into an earthen dish and let stand one hour. Turn into a preserving pan and cook gently, stirring constantly as soon as it thickens. Test by dropping a little on a plate; if it sets it is ready to pour into jars. Serve with toast at tea.

Bananas Cooked in Cranberry Juice.

Wash a pint of cranberries and cover with a cupful of cold water. Cook quickly ten minutes and press through a sieve. Halve six large bananas lengthwise and cover with the juice of half a lemon. Add one and one-half cupfuls of sugar to the hot berry juice, stir well and pour over the bananas. Place in a hot oven and bake until the fruit is tender. Remove to a glass dish and cool. The cranberry jelly will make a thick, rich sauce for the bananas.

Fried Bananas With Bacon or Sausage.

Cut each banana into halves crosswise, then lengthwise, roll in flour, cook in hot bacon or sausage fat and serve around the bacon or sausage.

Banana Muffins.

Cream two tablespoonfuls of butter, add one-half cupful of brown sugar, one beaten egg, two mashed bananas, two cupfuls of flour, one and one-fourth teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt and one-half cupful of milk. Cream the butter and sugar together, add egg well beaten and the mashed pulp of the bananas. Add the dry ingredients, alternating with the milk. Mix well; drop into greased tins and bake in a medium oven twelve minutes.

Banana Pie.

Bake a shell and fill with thinly sliced bananas which have been lightly sweetened, and a teaspoonful of lemon juice added to them. Cover with a rich, thick custard, cooked and cooled, and top with a few spoonfuls of whipped cream. Serve well chilled.

FROM THE BEGINNING

At his fur post, Sunset House, in the Canadian north, Jim Stuart, trader in charge, with his headman, Omar, rescues a girl from an overturned canoe in the lake. She is Aureole Blond, daughter of Stuart's rival in the fur business. In a spirit of fun, she and Jim arrange to exchange notes on a certain island. LeBlond, with Paradis, his half-breed lieutenant, arrives in search of the missing girl. Paradis displays enmity toward Jim, though LeBlond acknowledges his debt of gratitude. Going to the island to see if Aureole has left the promised note, Jim is ambushed by Paradis and forced to travel toward the LeBlond post. On the way he overturns the boat, leaving his enemy on the beach. Jim's superior, Andrew Christie, displeased at Stuart's trade showing, allows him, at his request, one year to "make good." Paradis bribes an Indian to ambush Jim and Omar. The attempt fails, and Jim takes the Indian to LeBlond. After hearing the story, LeBlond discharges Paradis. Jim and Aureole arrange a rendezvous, at which they acknowledge their mutual love, though Aureole is returning to Winnipeg, and Jim has planned a canoe trip to make a personal appeal to the Indians, who have persistently refused to trade their furs with him.

hands over the upturned pterbora on the beach, seeking possible damage, when Esau returned with a lighted candle.

"Not a mark," he announced; "dey want to steal her, but Smoke he hear dem too quick."

"Well, we know now what to expect from the Pipestone country," said Jim gloomily, with a shake of his head. "Do you suppose it was that Wagosh?"

"No," said Omar, "he know de dog was here."

"We'd better paddle straight to the islands in the morning and talk to them as if nothing had happened."

"Ah-hah, we go to de camp, first ting, I see w'at dat Wagosh say."

By sunrise they were on their way. As the strange canoe approached the fishing camp on the islands, groups of shawled women gathered in front of the tipis. Men, visiting their girl-nets set in the channels, stopped their work to call to each other, curious of the identity of the strangers. For the canoe of a white man had seldom nosed its way over the waters of the Pipestone lakes, deep in the heart of Keweenaw.

A rabble of wolfish dogs met the canoe as it slid into the beach of an island. Leaving Esau in the boat, with the challenging Smoke who, with stiff mane and bared fangs, answered the snarls of the Indian huskies, Omar and Jim stepped ashore.

"We are from the Lake of the Sand Beaches," announced Jim in Ojibwa to an old Indian, with face seamed with wrinkles, who left the group of women by the tipis and met them. "I wish to speak to the hunters who trade there. Send word to the other islands."

With face immobile as stone, the grizzled veteran scrutinized Jim and Omar through keen, milk-like eyes, before he replied.

"What are your names?" he asked quietly.

"I am Stuart, of the old company," said Jim, "and this is Omar, my head man." There was a shrewdness, an intelligence in the rugged features of the old man which impressed Stuart, and he wondered if he, too, were under the spell of Jingwak, the sorcerer.

"You have journeyed far. What have you come to the Pipestone to tell us?"

Irritated by the calm insistence of the Ojibwa, Omar broke in, "You will hear when you have called the hunters together. Send these boys here with word to the other islands."

The weathered skin of the Indian's face creased with a dry smile as he countered: "Who are you to give orders in the Pipestone country?"

Omar laughed goodnaturedly as he passed the Indian a plug of niggerhead. "My father has swallowed the fins of a dore and they prick his throat. There is tobacco and tea in the canoe. Send for the hunters."

With a grin, the old man ordered some boys, who stood near the group listening to the talk with hushed interest, to take Stuart's message.

"What d'yuh think of him? Has Paradis got him?" whispered Jim to Omar.

Long since, the embers of the fire had grayed and died, leaving the camp in gloom. Overhead the night had thickened, masking the stars. Through the spruce no air stirred. Like a blanket, the murk had settled upon the great lake. Except for the heavy breathing of three muffled figures there was no sound.

Curled near his master, nose buried under bushy tail, Smoke dreamed of snow-shoe rabbits leaping before him, of lurking timber wolves and the white sterner of fleeing caribou. Then, of a sudden, his visions of the chase faded and he stirred uneasily in his sleep. Presently a faint sound drifted to his pointed ears. He slowly lifted his head. His black nostrils quivered, but the air told him nothing.

Again his keen ears caught an almost imperceptible sound. The great dog rose to his feet, his back hair stiffening, his nose testing the air, as he listened. Then, satisfied, with a roar he leaped toward the lake. There was a muttered warning, the sound of moccasined feet, the churn of paddles, as the husky reached the beach to snarl his challenge to the unseen enemies who had faded like ghosts into the gloom. Then Omar, grasping his gun, followed by Esau and Jim, reached the shore.

Seizing the dog by the nose to choke his yelping, Omar listened, head close to the water, to get the direction of the retreating canoe; then fired twice. "Take dat!" he muttered.

"Light a candle, Esau. They were after the canoe when Smoke heard them," said Stuart. "They may have ruined her!"

Already Omar was groping with his under the strain—all heighten the effect. The countryside has lost one of its charms since oxen went out of fashion. Besides, skill in driving oxen is becoming one of the lost arts.

But they are altogether too slow for this fast age. While we like to look at oxen, we are certain that we should not like to ride behind them. We prefer to go whizzing in an automobile, so there seems to be nothing to be done about it. But we can't help feeling that we lose something by being so terribly progressive. Progress, like every other good thing, costs something.—Exchange.

Touching

The landlady was in a sentimental mood when dinner was served.

"This is the anniversary of the death of my poor, dear uncle," she sighed. "He was a sea captain, and went down with his ship this day five and twenty years ago. I was only a child when he went away, but I remember he gave me a pet lamb as a parting gift."

The boarder regarded his lamb cutlet with mournful interest.

"Poor, dear lamb!" he murmured reproachfully. "And you've killed it at last!"

Wooden Leg Uninsurable

The Supreme court of California has decided that a workman cannot collect a workmen's compensation liability benefit for injury to a wooden leg, in the case of John Driscoll, a teamster, whose wooden leg was broken when his horses shied and threw him. The case was bitterly fought, three judges dissenting from the majority of the bench. It was urged that loss of an artificial member was a real disability. The majority held that a decision favorable to the workman would open the door to claims for damage to crutches, eyeglasses and false teeth.

Devils. From the actions of the men and squaws it was evident to Stuart that Jingwak's efforts, successful as they had been in keeping the trade of these people from Sunset House, had failed to instill fear of him personally, except among the most superstitious. For at his request, they had come to look at him and listen to his words.

After passing tobacco to the men, Jim told them that their fathers for two hundred years had traded with the old company, and always had received fair treatment. To save them from a longer journey south, the old company had built a post on the Lake of the Sand Beaches, and wished to trade with them. But Paradis had come among them with lies which only children would believe. In his pay was a false shaman who lived on the bounty of the North-West company.

As Jim mentioned the name of Jingwak, from a group of young men in the rear of the Ojibwas rose groans of protest.

"It is a lie!" shouted a youth; but the voice of Zotaire lifted above the clamor of dissent.

"Bisan! Keep quiet!" commanded the old man. "You listened to Paradis when he said that this man who speaks had the Evil Eye and talked with devils. Now listen to him, and judge for yourselves who speaks with a double tongue."

Jim's heart leaped at the old Indian's defense of him. Here was a friend in need. Then Jim told the Indians that he would come in December, the little moon of the spirit, with dog-teams loaded with honest trade-goods, and save them the long trip south.

At the announcement there was a nodding of heads among the older men, but from the rear of the assembly, groans and cat-calls. However, when Omar told them of the disgrace of Paradis by his own chief—how he had been sent to Nipigon, a hush fell upon the swart-faced audience.

Shaking hands with most of the older men and women, Jim returned to the canoe, to find Esau and Omar squatted on the beach, watching Zotaire trace with his fingers a rough sketch of the trail north to the Sturgeon river.

Through the afternoon the three friends paddled down the first of the Pipestone lakes and made camp on an island near the outlet. To the north lay other and larger lakes of the Pipestone chain, which formed the headwaters of the Sturgeon river. Eating their supper of bannock, fried pike, and tea, they considered the situation as they smoked.

"Too bad old Zotaire wouldn't come with us," regretted Jim. "He seems to have influence with these people."

"He had fear to travel to de Sturgeon," replied Esau. "He tell me dey might keel heem eef dey foun' heem wid us."

"Paradees and Jingwak got plenty fren' up dere," added the brooding Omar.

"We're in for trouble on the Sturgeon, I guess. But I'm going to find that crooked fakir, trouble or no trouble," snapped Jim. "I've got just one year to get some of that fur, or quit."

For a space, Omar looked at his discouraged chief, as he sat, elbows on knees, head in hands. Then the half-breed rested an iron-hard hand on Jim's shoulder, as he said: "We stay en dees cuntry and hunt for dat Jingwak untill de ice drive us out."

"But suppose we do find him, how're we going to break his hold on the Indians?"

"Leave dat to Omar and Esau."

"What d'yuh two intend to do? You can't kill him, you know, you old wolf. You'd ruin me if you did. And they'd get you before you got out. Remember, you've got a family."

The black eyes of Omar twinkled as they met the sphinxlike gaze of the old Indian. "Esau and Omar find de way to feex dat wabeno."

But Jim saw little hope in the situation. He had recklessly undertaken to double the trade of Sunset House within the year by getting some of the Pipestone and Sturgeon river fur from LeBlond. But would these Ojibwas trade with him when he stole a march on his rival and came to them on the snow in December? However, there was but one line of action open at present, and that was to visit them, show himself, and talk to them as he had talked to the fishing camps up the lake. Then the thought of the girl who had begged him to stay at Mitawagagama until she went south drove his present quest from his mind. Was he ever to see her again? Would she come back in the spring? If she did, she would find a defeated fur trader, out of a job, who had had the boldness to make love to a girl who could only pity him. As the quiet lake went rose colored under the flush of the afterglow, and the shadow-packed spruce of the adjacent shore of the mainland deepened from purple to violet, Jim smoked with his bitter thoughts, while Omar and Esau talked together in low tones. Then, as his clouded gray eyes lifted from the embers of the supper fire into which he had been staring, a cold nose touched his hand and a massive, hairy hand nudged his arm, while a pair of slant brown eyes sought his.

"Hello, Smoke!" Jim circled the neck of the dog with his arm. "Smoke loves Jim, even if he's a poor fur man, and a fool to love her."

As if sensing the mood of the man who held his devotion, the dog whined, his red tongue caressing Jim's hand.

Lesson for January 1

JOHN PREPARES THE WAY FOR JESUS

Mark 1:1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT—Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.

Mark 1:3.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Faithful Messenger.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The King's Messenger.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Heralds of the King.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Preparing the Way for the Christ.

Since the lessons for the first six months of 1933 are mainly taken from the Gospel according to Mark, it is necessary to grasp the central purpose of this Gospel. In the Old Testament is set forth an august portrait of the Messiah. He is the Branch, the King (Jer. 23:5); the Branch, the Servant (Zech. 3:8); the Branch, the Man (Zech. 6:12); the Branch of the Lord (Isa. 4:2).

The fourfold account contained in the Gospels, placed alongside the Old Testament predictions, fits exactly. Matthew presents him as the King; Mark, the Servant of the Lord; Luke as the Kinsman-Redeemer, and John as the Son of God. The central theme of Mark is the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God (1:1). The key verse is Mark 10:45, "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." The key words are "straightway," "forthwith," "immediately." The picture of the divine Servant energetically doing the Father's work is most beautiful, for the girded one is as beautiful as the arrayed one.

I. Who Is This Servant (v. 1)?

This servant who so fully and energetically executed the divine will is the very Son of God.

II. The Forerunner of the Divine Servant (vv. 2-8).

1. Who he was (vv. 2, 3). He was John the Baptist who was prophesied of more than five hundred years before (Isa. 40:3).

2. His mission (v. 2). It was to prepare the way for Christ's coming. He represented himself as but a voice of one crying in the wilderness. He was therefore God's voice proclaiming the divine will and purpose. He was content to be but a voice.

3. His message (vv. 3-8).

a. Prepare ye the way of the Lord (v. 3). It was customary for servants to go before distinguished personages and prepare the way over which they were to travel. In this preparation there was to be a removal of stones, the leveling of the surface, etc. John's message meant therefore that the people should remove from their hearts everything which hindered the coming of the Lord. He called upon them to humble themselves, to bring down the high places of pride and straighten out the crooked places and confess their sins.

b. The baptism of repentance (v. 4). In preparation for the coming of Christ, people were to repent of their sins. Those who repented were to be baptized. Baptism was to be administered to those who repented as an expression of penitence which led to forgiveness of sin.

c. The coming of the Messiah (vv. 7, 8). The coming one was to be much greater than himself, so great that John was unworthy to loose the latchet of his shoes. The superior dignity of Christ was not only in his person but in the work he was to perform. John merely baptized with water but Jesus with the Holy Ghost.

4. His success (v. 5). People from all over Judea and Jerusalem went out and were baptized. John's dress and demeanor were in keeping with his stern mission. He was clothed with camel's hair and had on a girdle of skin. Locusts and wild honey constituted his food. His food and dress indicated that he had withdrawn from the world as a protest against its follies and sins.

III. The Divine Servant Baptized (vv. 9-11).

Jesus was not baptized because he sinned and therefore needed repentance, but because he had taken the sinner's place and was about to accomplish his work which would constitute the basis of all righteousness. He was now dedicating himself to the task of bringing in righteousness through his sacrificed death. Observe in connection with his baptism:

1. The opened heavens (v. 10). This indicated his connection with heaven.

2. The descent of the Spirit upon him (v. 10). This was the divine seal to his work.

3. The voice of approval from heaven (v. 11). This made clear to John the fact that Jesus was the Messiah.

Be Busy

When you are very busy, your beliefs like your clothes will wear out rapidly, and you will provide yourself with new ones. But keep very busy. Religion is not what men believe. Religion is what men do with their beliefs.

A Divine Man

God will not have his work made manifest by cowards. It needs a divine man to exhibit anything divine.—Emerson.

JUST what got into William Blodgett Traynor after he married Victoria none of his friends seemed able to decide. He was thirty years older than she—a hale and vigorous fifty to her fragile twenty. He was good looking, successful in a large way in business, he had social background and great personal magnetism.

Victoria was beautiful, she was young, she was well bred in the best sense of the term. Though her family had no money she had been well educated and had traveled a little and met the right kind of people so that she was perfectly able to take her place as head of Traynor's big house. That wasn't where the trouble lay. He had kept the house open for two or three years alone since his mother's death—she had been one of the social leaders of her day. Victoria stepped into his mother's shoes, so far as social graces went. Everybody talked about the reign of the new Mrs. Traynor as a foregone fact.

Victoria really loved Traynor. He knew it. He, of course, adored her. Everybody knew that. And they seemed ideally, beautifully happy. The gracious old house glowed with hospitality of the best sort. Victoria's young friends and his older ones mingled in charming groups.

That may have been where the trouble started. One of her friends was Jack Orcutt. He was an artist. Poor. Not more than twenty-three.

One night William Traynor and Victoria were alone in their big library. He gathered her, unresisting, into his arms. And as he held her he was suddenly painfully conscious of her youth, of his greater age.

If—one of those ifs that change destinies—if Victoria had lain there quietly for a moment in her husband's arms, life would have smoothed out for them in a few moments. William Traynor's mood of bitter resentment, so ready to turn into raging jealousy, would have passed as suddenly as it had come, leaving no memory behind it.

But Victoria, unmeaningly, did just the wrong thing. She loved her husband. She put a soft, creamy hand up to her husband's face.

"William," she said, "I've been thinking. We have so much. I've everything."

He drew her jealously closer.

"I've been wondering if you'd do something—rather big—to make me happy."

She went on: "You know Jack Orcutt. He's—well, he's a genius. I know it. But he needs a year in Paris. And he's—well, he can't manage it. You know he has an invalid sister to look after. He's a portrait painter, and somehow or other he ought to be given his chance. See what I'm getting at, dear?"

"I think so," said Traynor in a hard, low voice. But Victoria didn't notice his voice. She went on with her plea for Jack.

"Well, I've been thinking about him. And I wondered if you couldn't perhaps do something to give him his year abroad. We've got so much—and he has so little. I thought maybe we could look after his sister—I mean find a place where she could stay in exchange for tutoring—some place in the country. She's a lovely girl, and awfully bright. And then you could commission him to paint a portrait of me—next summer, when we go to Paris. But you could tell him he must have training there before he does it, and you could pay him in advance—more than it's worth. And that would fix things up." She stopped, flushed and delighted with her plan. Getting no reply from Traynor, she asked him: "Wouldn't you like a portrait of me done by Jack Orcutt?"

Traynor rose, pushing her roughly away from him. He stood his back to the fireplace, his hands on her shoulders. He laughed harshly.

"A picture of you—for me—done by Jack Orcutt? A beautiful idea. A lovely thing, of course. A sort of consolation prize given by Spring to Winter. He'll go to Paris, on my money, and be waiting there for you when we go over next summer? That's a pretty idea. He'll do your portrait for me. You'll keep your old husband and his money—and have your young—"

Traynor said no more. Victoria, her face whiter than her dress, stood facing him. She stiffened under his hands and he took them away. She said nothing, as she turned and left the room.

In fact, she never spoke to Traynor again. Arrangements were made through others. She left the house that night, and in the course of time a divorce was managed.

Victoria really loved Traynor. A couple of years later she married Jack Orcutt. Of course nobody got the story exactly right. People said Victoria had tired of Traynor—it was another case where youth sought youth, and age was left with nothing but memories. She had got most of the blame, though. After struggling along doing illustrating in New York, Orcutt and Victoria went to Paris. They managed it somehow.

Traynor keeps the big house—but it is lonely and unused. Sometimes when he sits musing before the library fire, he seems to see a soft, white little figure come pleading up to his side, explaining and explaining. But when he turns the figure has faded away.

"No healthier than I feel!"

"Where did you get that tan? Florida?"

"No, Sir I've been right here at my desk six days a week. And working hard, too."

"What's your secret?"

"Sunshine every day I shave under one of those new ultra-violet ray lamps every morning. Doc Jordan told me about it. I haven't felt so fit in years."

"You don't say."

"It's a fact. The whole family uses it. Little Jimmie hasn't had a cold all fall—and you know what the weather's been. Ultra-violet rays seem to give you more resistance—help you fight off disease germs."

SUNSHINE—IN YOUR HOME—EVERY DAY

Science has made a wonderful new sun and moved it indoors. Wherever there is an electric outlet, a sunshine lamp can be plugged in your home. Its ultra-violet rays contain all the beneficial qualities of real summer sunshine. Men can expose themselves every morning while shaving. Women can relax with a book. (Short treatments will not tan the skin.) Children can play on the floor and every minute spent under the lamp their bodies will be drinking up sunshine. Goggles need not be worn. Ask your doctor about the value of regular sun baths in building up resistance to colds. And see these sun lamps now featured at your Public Service Store:

Other sun lamps and fixtures, including General Electric, at $20.50 and up.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMPANY OF NORTHERN ILLINOIS

About the Public Service Company:

Several outstanding facts about this Company probably are not as well understood as I think they should be. (1) It is purely an operating company and is not owned or controlled by any other company. (2) The majority of its stockholders live right here—it is "home owned". (3) All of its officers and employees live here. (4) Its future is irrevocably dependent upon the growth and prosperity of northern Illinois.

Historically Correct Sketches

1833 1933

1. Andrew Jackson, the first Democratic President, who was occupying the White House in 1833. (Author's Note: To forestall those who say, "But wasn't Thomas Jefferson the first Democratic President?" It may be pointed out that Jefferson, Madison, Monroe and John Quincy Adams were known as "Republicans" or "Democratic-Republicans" and that Jackson was truly the first Democratic President.)

2. Replica of the "Stourbridge Lion," the first practicable locomotive to run upon a permanent railroad track in America. The Lion's trial trip was made at Honesdale, Pa., on August 9, 1829, and it paved the way for other railroad ventures which by 1833 were proving the practicability of this form of transportation.

3. A stage station and a stage coach, which in 1833 was the principal means of transporting passengers and mail.

4. Chicago's "sky-line" in 1833.

5. Franklin D. Roosevelt, the Democratic President who will occupy the White House in 1933 after three Republican administrations.

6. The "railplane," an entirely new form of high speed transport which has now been developed to a practical working conclusion. It can be built over existing railways, making it a fast passenger service. The passenger cars, which are self-propelled and driven by air screws fore and aft, are stream-lined and suspended from a steel girder.

7. The very latest thing in airmail planes.

8. One of the main groups of exhibition buildings for the Chicago Century of Progress exposition which will open in 1933, with their modernistic set-backs, terraces and multi-levels for traffic.

Ezekiel Webster confessed, from a cold sense of duty.

"Jackson was, as no President before him, the choice of the masses. His popular vote in 1824 revealed not only his personal popularity, but the growing power of the democratic elements in the nation, and his defeat in the house of representatives only strengthened his own and the people's determination to be finally victorious. The untrained, self-willed, passionate frontier soldier came to power in 1828 as the standard bearer of a mighty democratic uprising which was destined before it ran its course to break down oligarchical party organizations, to liberalize state and local governments, and to turn the stream of national politics into wholly new channels. It was futile for men of the old school to protest and to prophesy misfortune for the country under its new rulers. The people had spoken, and this time the people's will was not to be denied."

In 1933 there will be another Democratic President in the White House. Obviously it would be futile to attempt to demonstrate any similarity between Andrew Jackson and Franklin D. Roosevelt for both the heredity and the environment which produced the two men were so different as to make any logical correlation impossible. But since the forces which work to place men in positions of power and responsibility are invariably more important than the men themselves, isn't it more important that there is a plausible similarity between the forces which placed there two Democratic Presidents in the White House? A century ago there was a political revolution after four decades of rule by the Federalists and Democratic-Republicans (into which the Federalists had gradually merged). The election of last November had all the aspects of a political revolution after twelve years of Republican rule and there is something singularly appropriate to that election in Professor Ogg's words about the election of Jackson: "It was futile for men of the old school to protest and prophesy misfortune for the country under its new rulers. The people had spoken and this time the people's will was not to be denied."

So in 1933 the American people face the future under a new administration not only in their National Capital but in many state capitals as well. They have been promised a "new deal" for such was the slogan of the winning Presidential candidate. Whether or not he will be able to carry out that promise, with all its implications, to their satisfaction remains to be seen. For, granting him the utmost in sincerity and honesty of purpose, the fact remains that factors over which he will have no control will shape the destiny of the nation during the next third of the century and those factors, rather than the actions of one man or group of men, will make the "new deal" whatever it turns out to be.

There can be no doubt that the principles of which Andrew Jackson was the exponent profoundly influenced the history of the United States during the third of the century which followed 1833. But they were merely political principles and their influence on our history was negligible compared to the influence of the social and economic forces which were set in motion during that time.

It was this decade which saw a new social consciousness being aroused in the nation. For the first time men were beginning to question actively the right of one race to hold in bondage another race. New Year's day, 1831, saw the publication of the first number of William Lloyd Garrison's Liberator and within two years there had been organized the American Anti-Slavery society. More than that, the common man was beginning to become more conscious of his rights as a man and a citizen. Many of the states had rid themselves of the old property and tax qualifications for voters, the property qualifications for officers had been diminished or had disappeared and nearly all the state officers, including judges, were being elected by popular vote instead of being chosen by the legislature or governor, as had been the case formerly.

Coincidentally with these social movements were economic movements which were to revolutionize the life of the American people. It was an era of industrial progress, of internal improvements and of national development in a number of material ways. Albert Bushnell Hart, the historian, has declared that "In the 20 years

MIAMI BEACH FLORIDA

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

HEAD of us lies a new year—1933.

Although it does not mark the "turn of the century" nor yet "reaching the half-way mark"—both of which furnish a logical excuse for pausing to take stock, to look back and to see what progress we have made socially, politically, economically and spiritually; yet there is ample reason for doing that very thing just now. For 1933 will round out the first third of the Twentieth century and if there is anything in history repeating itself, the next third will be filled with events of the greatest significance to the future of our nation. Certainly that was true during the corresponding period in the Nineteenth century and a comparison and contrast of 1833 and 1933 cannot fail to be of interest and, perhaps, of value to Americans as they face the new year.

In 1833 there was a new type of President in the White House, a Democratic President. Andrew Jackson was his name and his being there had come about through a veritable political revolution. Its significance has been well appraised by the historian, Frederic Austin Ogg, in his volume "The Reign of Andrew Jackson—A Chronicle of the Frontier in Politics" in the Yale University Press series "The Chronicles of America." He writes:

"Jackson's election to the Presidency in 1828 was correctly described by Senator Benton as 'a triumph of democratic principle, and an assertion of the people's right to govern themselves.' Jefferson in his day was a candidate of the masses, and his triumph over John Adams in 1800 was received with great public acclaim. Yet the Virginian was at best an aristocratic sort of democrat; he was never in the fullest sense a man of the people. Neither Madison nor Monroe inspired enthusiasm, and for John Quincy Adams even New Englanders voted, as
